

MD Golf don't pay players millions to use their kit, so you won't see too many MD's appearing on tour. But this is why their gear costs less. Examine the Superstrong and you realise it's made of the same components as most of the more expensive clubs on test. The shafts are Dynamic Gold and the grips are made by Golf Pride. As for performance, the Superstrong has a little more weight around the club's perimeter than most and was the most forgiving on test. The cavity-backs are CNC milled, which creates a consistent thin face, which seemed to sling shots off the club like a modern driver. The set progresses nicely from long to short irons, but if we had a gripe it was the shiny finish which glares in bright sun. If you're fed up lining the pro's pockets or just can't justify the cost of the big brands, these are a brilliant alternative.
